‘Benediction (text) before the Lord, in the beginning of celebrating
(a wedding), in the Aryan Land (Persia), in such an such (a city).

May you be successful like the lord Ahura Mazdā with regard to
His creations.

Be ye fortunate and best like Kavi Haosravah.
Be ye true to your covenant like the Yazata Miθra.
Be ye a smiter of enemies like Zairi.vairi.
Be ye handsome like Syāvaršan.
Be ye radiant like Vaijana.
Be ye robust like Sāma of heroic heart.
Be ye noble like Raodastaxma.
Be ye a lancer like Spəṇtōdāta.
Be ye a seer like the viceroy Jāmāspa.
Be ye triumphant and victorious like the truthful Fravarti.
Be ye liberal like Tištarya.
Be ye mild like the rains.
Be ye clear-sighted like the sun.
Be ye of many meritorious deeds (in your stock) like Zaraθuštra.
Be ye long-lived like the sovereign Zrvan.
Be ye fertile like the earth Spəṇtā Ārmaiti.

Be ye much connected like a deep (navigable) river.
Be ye rich in stores like winter.
Be ye merry like spring.
Be ye fragrant like musk.
Be ye desirable like gold.
Be ye current (in the world) like silver (coins).
Be ye active (in ceremonial action) like the Lord Ahura Mazdā unto His own creations.

May these benedictions be unto you as the moon, and the sun, and water, and fire, and wine, and myrtle, and musk, and jasmine, and rose, and marjoram.

Unto A (the bridegroom) and unto B (the bride) may there be a thousand years of life, together with your relatives.

May you be intoxicated through pure food, sweet wine, and sweet-smelling herb, with your wife (husband).

May there be born a truthful man (hero), who may protect (the land of) the Aryans, who may seek fame, who may smite the enemies, and who may illuminate the family (by a descendant).

Peace (be on you).'
